

Pam King

Business, Marketing, and Information Technology
State Superintendent Advisory Council

Executive Director of the Grafton Chamber of Commerce

“Business, marketing, and information technology education is important for every student, regardless of their career path. It is invaluable for young people to learn about how businesses develop and succeed and the role that marketing plays in that success. Without technology education, students would not be able to function in any work environment. Technology drives everything. It is especially important for schools and businesses to work together to determine what skills are necessary for 21st century learners.”

