Business, Marketing, and Information Technology
State Superintendent Advisory Council

Chapter Leader at Project Management Institute &
Project Management Professional at Associated Bank

“It's important that Wisconsin professionals support business, marketing, and information technology education so that our children have the knowledge and skills necessary for the business world today and in the future. I am most passionate about promoting project management and financial literacy skills, which we can start teaching to children as young as my elementary-age son. We need to support the growth of these skills by providing children with opportunities via in-class learning, student organizations, and workplace experiences as they progress through middle and high school.”
