

BUILDING NETWORKS OF EDUCATORS

More than ever it seems critical for us to build connections, not only to support the young artists, dancers, musicians, actors, and artistic technicians in our care, but also with each other. The current landscape and expansion of where learning is taking place is pushing us into new avenues. To answer this shift in space and direction for education, I started a series of virtual office hours for arts educators in March. These weekly sessions started with just bringing us together to express our challenges, opportunities, and needs. The April sessions continued with a focus on the online resources participants cited as having potential for online learning. In May, we are taking a breath in again to reflect on our roles as arts educators and to experience some professional videos and discussions together. Check page 2 for the details, registration information, and about the recordings available from past sessions. Besides the online sessions, please also visit the resources within this newsletter and online.

Again, thank you for your patience, persistence, care, and creativity to support our school communities and each other. My thoughts and prayers continue to ring out for all of us through these challenges.

Watch Party

You're invited to participate in an arts education video, "Watch Party." There are four sessions scheduled from 12-12:45 pm in May. Register for the dates of interest and vote for one of the three video choices for each date you wish to attend. The video with the most votes for each session will be highlighted at the "Watch Party." Participants will dive into a deep discussion about the video's content application to arts learning. Please register by 3 pm CST two days prior to the session date in order to be provided with the Zoom sign-in information in time for the session. If you have any questions, please contact Julie Palkowski.
