

Green Bean

History

Green, navy, kidney, and black beans all originated in Peru. Beans were spread throughout South, Central, and North America by migrating Americans Indians. Beans were essential to the diets of the native tribes, and they continue to play a large role in the diets of South and Central Americans.

Beans are not found in the Americas alone. Varieties of beans have been growing in Europe, Africa, and Asia for as long as green beans have been growing in South America. For example, the broad bean originated in Europe and has been found in sites of Iron Age and Bronze Age settlements as well as Egyptian tombs. Spanish explorers took the green bean back to Europe in the 16th century and introduced it there.
